All, there were demonstrations across the United States today to protest the death of Rebecca Good at the hands of ICE. We have also seen videos of the event that led to her death. There is more than one version of what happened as there were several people recording the event. Hence, there is a debate about what actually went down.

We will never know...

Earlier today had the opportunity to chat with Laurel Krause, whose sister, Allison, was killed by the National Guard at Kent State. We spoke about the flood of news about Rebecca Good's death. Laurel observed that we will never know what transpired. There are too many forces at work to muddy the waters. She indicated that the same situation has occurred with the killings at Kent State. After 56 years, she states, the events at Kent State are still being concealed.

Not an isolated example...

Conspiracy theorists can probably provide a list a mile-long about events that are being hidden from the public. Generally by the government. Some of the information the conspiracy promoters disseminate is, frankly, far-fetched. Yet, there are persistent unanswered questions about some very important public events.

The assassination of Pres. John F Kennedy is high on the list of mysteries. The crime has been attributed to Fidel Castro, organized crime, a variety of right-wing groups, etc. Every person I have ever heard speaking about the JFK assassination is convinced of what they are saying. And they generally think that I'm an idiot if I don't believe every word they say. That is annoying.

Even the facts around Pearl Harbor, Warren G Harding's death, how the Spanish-American war got started, even Lincoln's assassination are alleged to have been obscured. There are even some who believe that Hitler lived to a ripe old age in Argentina after escaping Germany. So, it is not surprising that manipulating information is possible. Hiding information which might be very uncomfortable for some if known.

Dealing with hidden information...

Knowing how to deal with hidden information is a technique that is probably hidden from most of us. I think all of us in the APT Group realize that there are some things to which we do not have access. And we never will. Frankly, we have a greater likelihood of finding out the truth about flying saucers.

Does this make any sense?

Several columns ago I discussed the problem that I was having with a bank in New Jersey where I had a checking account a long time ago. The account was dormant – completely forgotten about. When I received a letter from the bank telling me that I had a balance I did the only thing I could think of. I started the process of closing the account.

Now you would think that's something is pretty easy to do. It really wasn't because they never completely explained the process, preferring to spring little impediments along the way.

Now, the account is ready to be closed. I asked for a check to be sent to me that my PO Box. Believe it or not I was told that was impossible and that they can only send the check to my home address. Supposedly for "security reasons." When I asked, "Why?" I was told "It's policy."

As far as I'm concerned it is a policy with absolutely no basis in reality like so many policies that are concocted by people who enjoy making rules so they can enforce them.

As a follow-up to the explanation of, "It's policy," I asked why it was okay for them to send bank statements and other correspondence to me at my PO Box? The PO Box is secure, whereas my mailbox just sits in the open at the curb. And is easy pickings for anybody who would like to find out what I'm up to.

The bird feeder is placed...

Ryan Johnson, the fellow whose company did the roof and siding on my house helped me find a spot to hang the birdfeeder. I needed his expertise because I did not want to try drilling a hole in the aluminum siding. I would be out of my league and would probably screw things up. I am rather far from being a handyman. (The only essential skills that I have are how to use a plunger and a plumber's snake.)

The birdfeeder is hanging in a spot that lets me see it when I am at my desk. I understand that is going to take a little while for birds to discover it. That will require some patience on my part. Not easy for me. But it's going to be worthwhile.

Here is where the feeder is hanging:

There are quite a few birds that stick around for the Wisconsin Winter (hard to imagine). I expect that they will be steady customers. Certainly hope so. (When I have them, I'll post photos.) It will be nice to have some animals hanging around in addition to the neighborhood foxes, deer, possums, chipmunks, raccoons, .squirrels, moles, dogs, and cats.

First yawn...

Until tomorrow...
