Welcome to the world of Francis Interiors, where our mission is to create impactful environments that carry the essence of the humans living there.

Our style is one of layered luxury with vibrant notes. In our work you will find balance, contrast, and movement.

We believe that interior design is a visual expression of who you are. We create homes where personalities are revealed and stories are told in beautiful, dynamic, and functional spaces.

Tribeca

Nestled in the heart of Tribeca, in the acclaimed ‘Jenga’ building, this 56 Leonard Street apartment’s captivating exterior is matched by the spectacular city views of its interiors.

The design of the building has created quite the buzz, as its striking design is recognized as a global landmark by Herzog & de Meuron, and is one of the most notable new builds in NYC of the past decade.

This luxury condo was acquired as a pied-à-terre for our well-traveled client with multiple residences.

The unique home stands out from the rest in both its character and composition.

The design requested a soft approach given the layout's sharp, masculine lines and exposed architectural elements.

Central Park West |

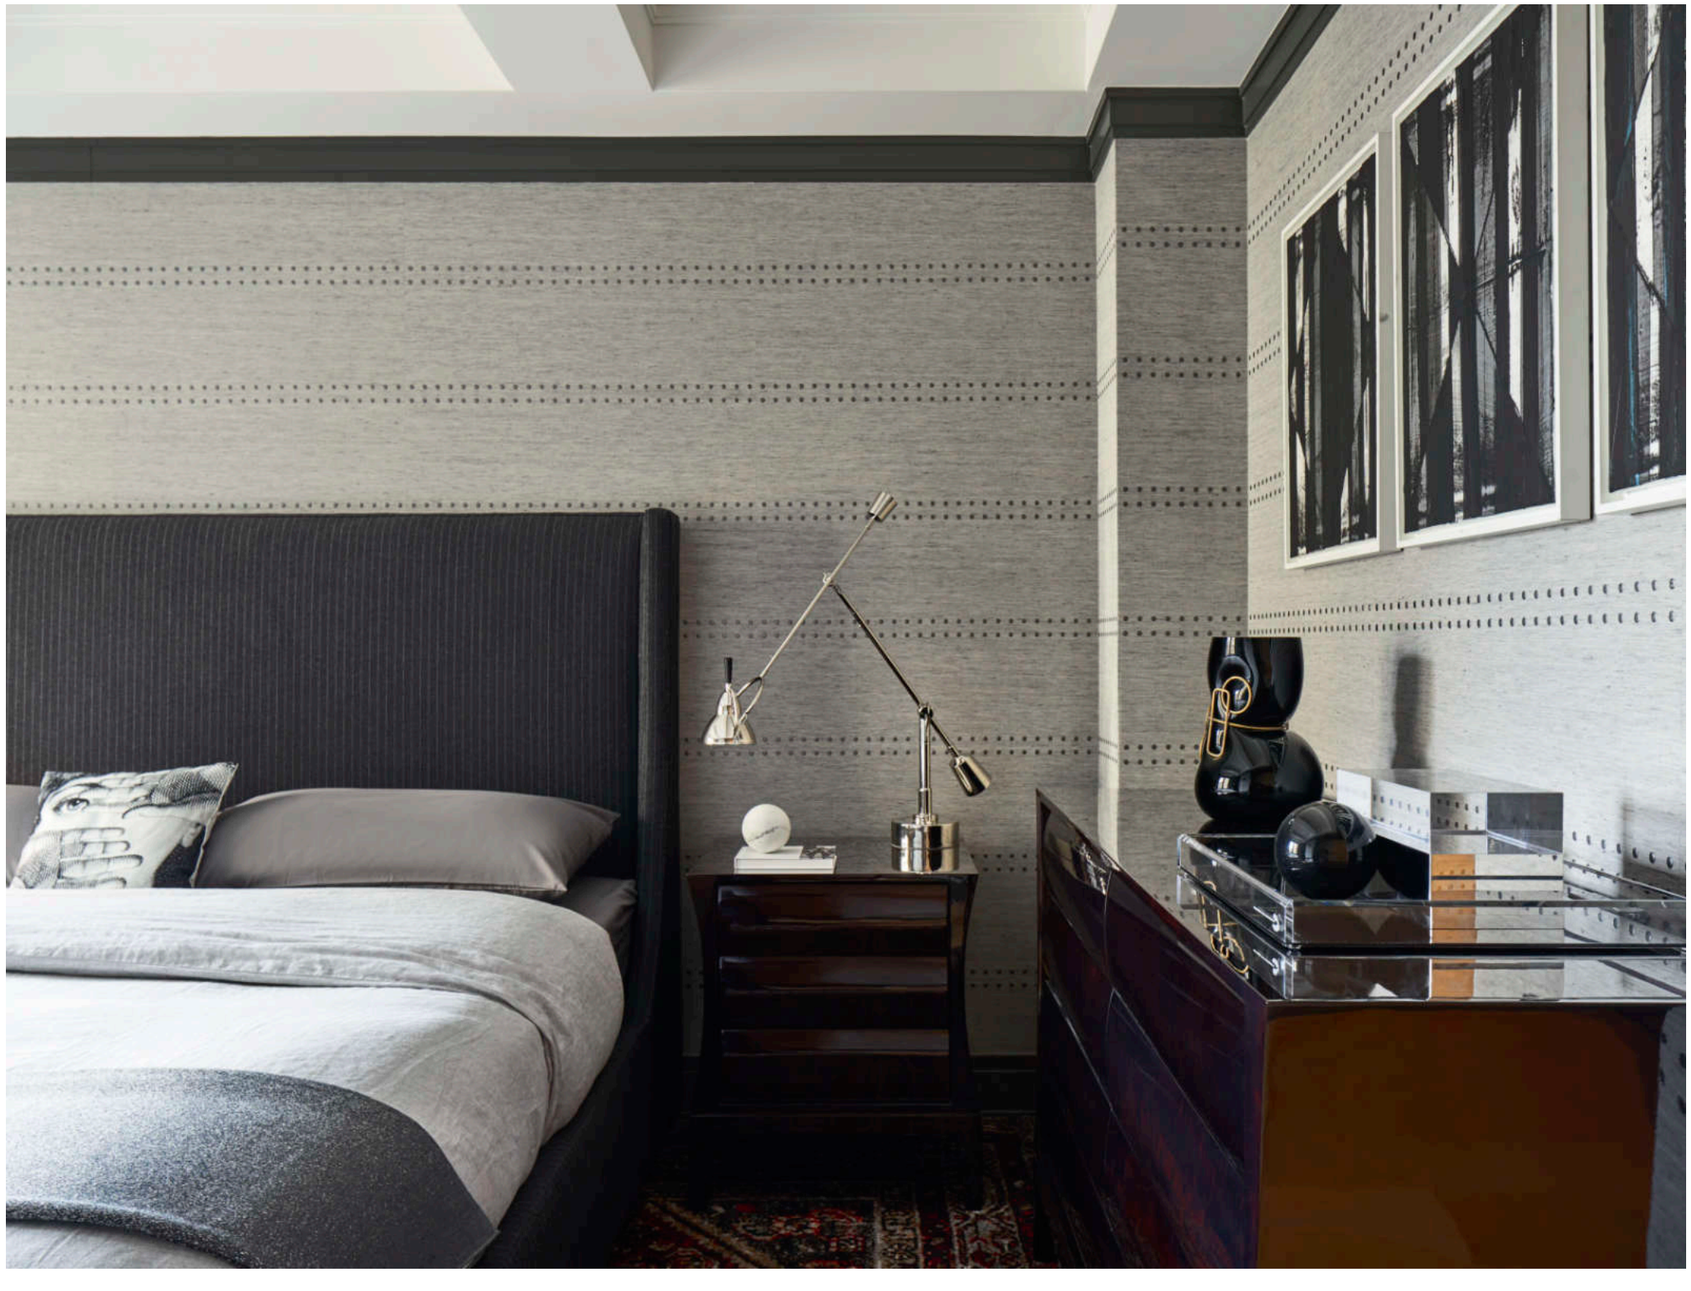

Marriage is not only a unity of love and partnership, it's also a unity of style and home.

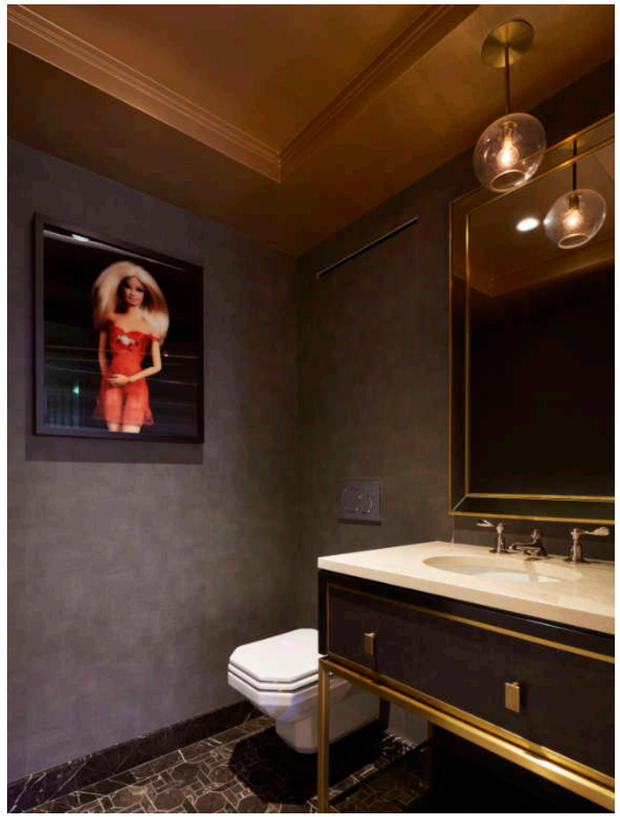

In this custom-tailored, high-end Central Park West condo, a newly-married couple sought the expertise of the Francis Interiors team.

The objective was clear: incorporate each individual's design aesthetic and personality into the shared home while maximizing the prime views of Central Park.

Complementing the pre-war architectural bones with high-end finishes and custom designed and fabricated furniture, Francis Interiors combined the couple's seemingly opposed classical and modern design styles, producing a new luxury residence with notes that evoked masculinity, harmony, and elegance.

Waterline Square

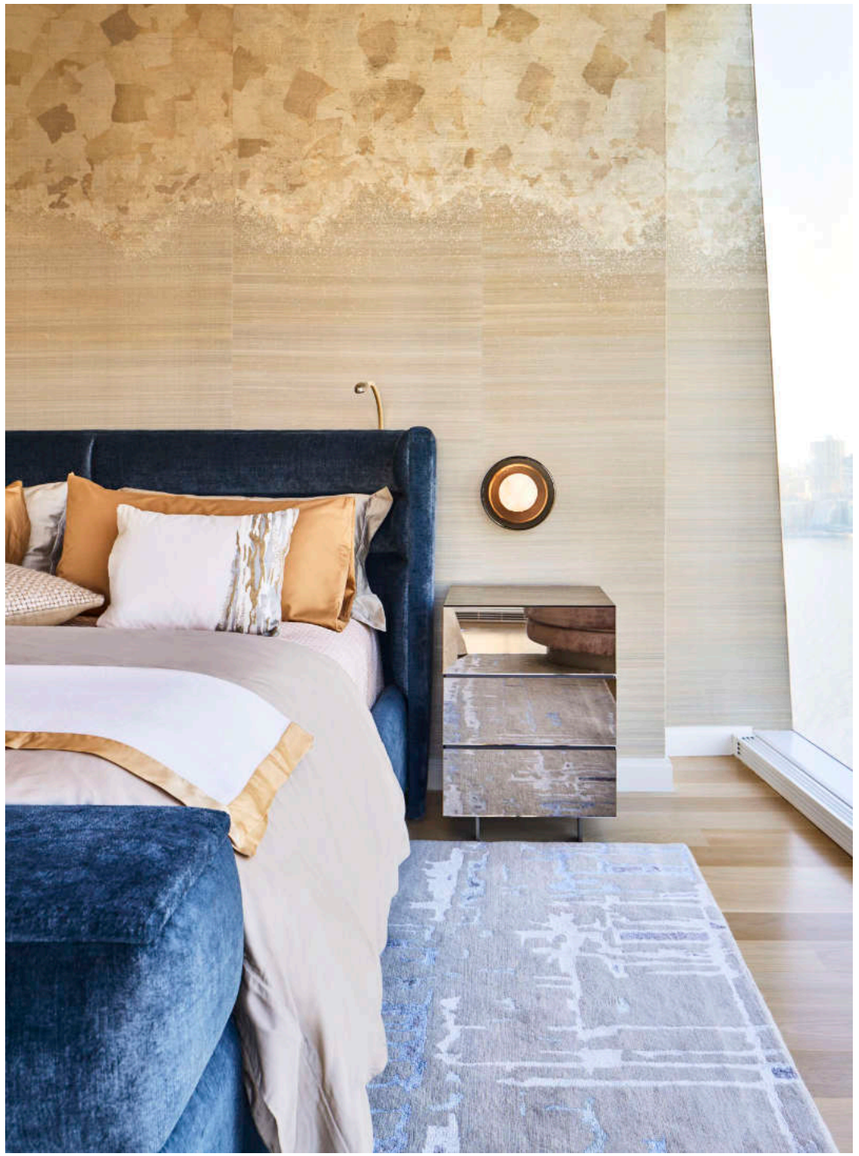

Relocating from Nashville, this prominent physician and her husband, a college baseball coach, decided to create a home in the new Manhattan neighborhood of Waterline Square.

As a blank canvas, the condo is saturated in golden sunlight during the day and speckled with twinkling city lights at night.

Harlem I

“You should always feel like you can display what’s important to you,” says Francis Toumbakaris, Founder and Principle Designer of Francis Interiors.

With this in mind, it was important to our clients that their upscale Harlem residence become an oasis to tastefully display their curated collection of Asian art and meaningful Buddha statues.

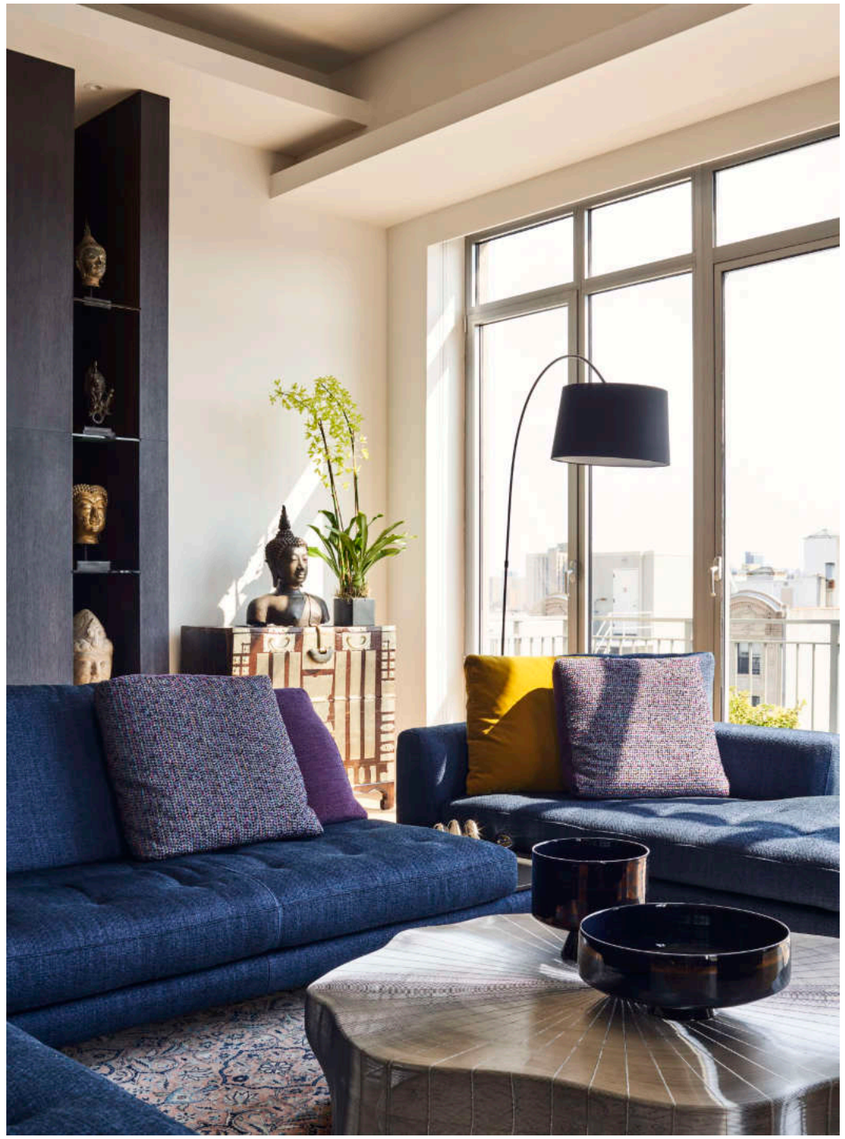

Each room presented a new opportunity to heighten the drama of the apartment: a low contemporary sofa allowed an unobstructed view of the Manhattan skyline; thoughtful lighting design hid the boxiness of the HVAC duct work and adorned the ceiling with intrigue; and the dressed fireplace of black porcelain marble countered the opposing wall of custom shelving and Buddha heads.

Through it all, the Francis Interiors team took advantage of each architectural asset while addressing and minimizing any design challenge, ensuring the clients' needs and expectations were not only met but surpassed.

Central Park West II

This luxury residence marked our second full-scale project in this historic building, located along the striking beauty of Central Park West.

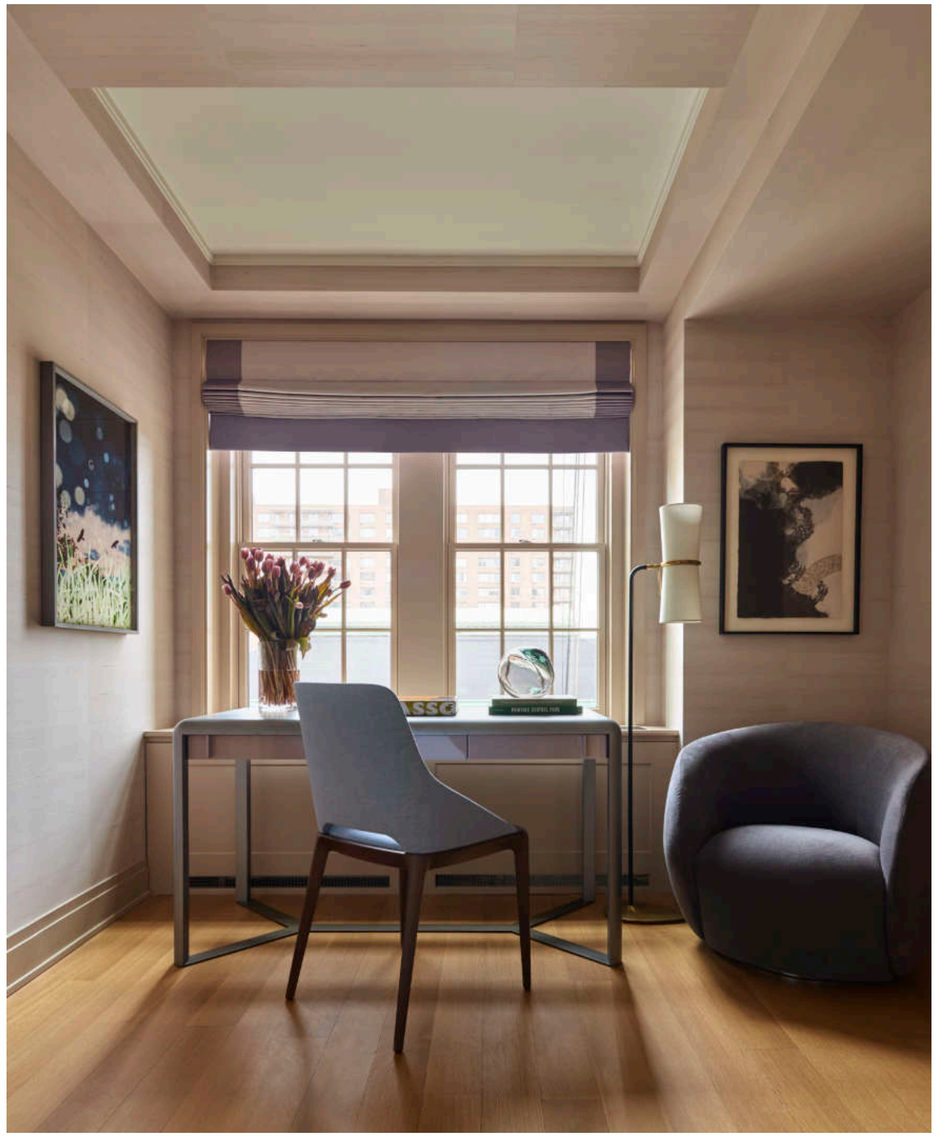

The living room was designed with deliberate curvaceousness to soften the sharp angles of its original prewar bones.

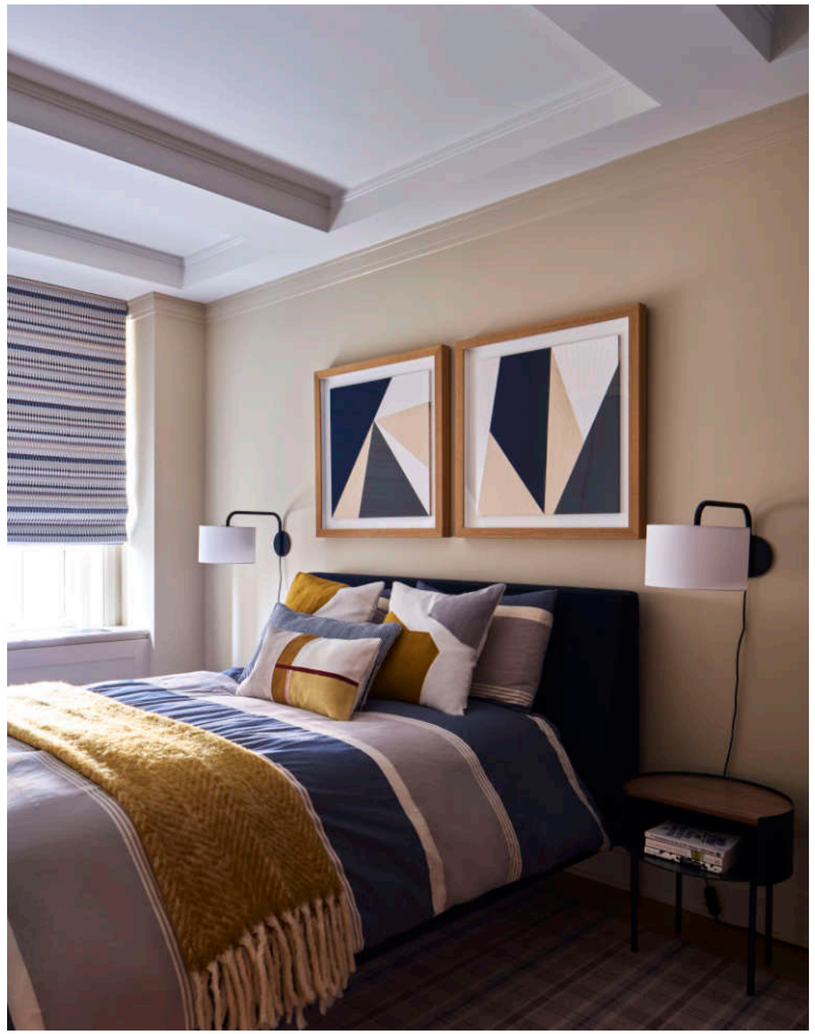

Silk wall-coverings line the main bedroom, creating an elegant and serene atmosphere for restful sleep or hours spent working from home.

Harlem II

A young family wanted their story illustrated in every room of their first home in Morningside Heights, Harlem by thoughtfully reconnecting them with their rich heritage and mutual experiences.

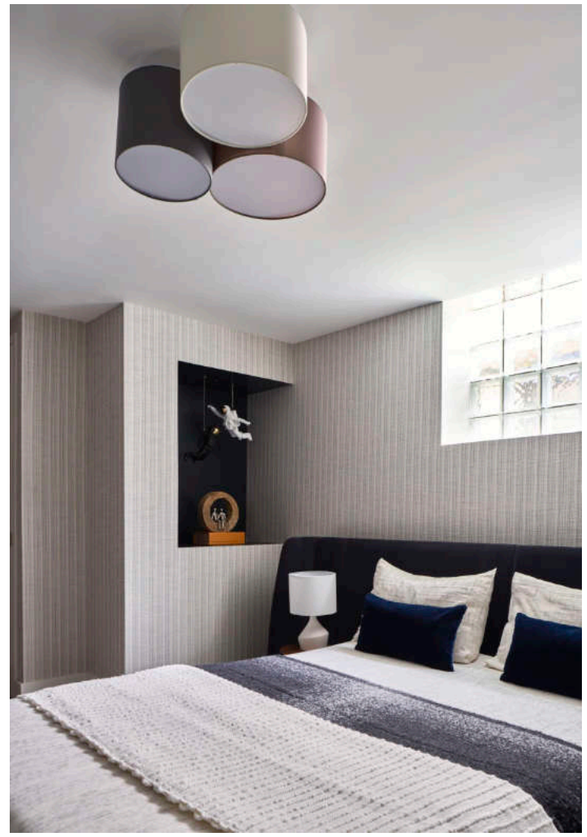

The couple had a particular direction for their home aesthetic which was to emphasize their love of community and culture along with their deep appreciation for jazz music and the arts.

West Village

This quintessential NYC apartment was completely reimagined while retaining the structural spirit.

Architectural and decorative lighting design, custom millwork and bespoke furnishings and finishes in each corner of the home tell a unique story of the client's journey from San Francisco to New York.

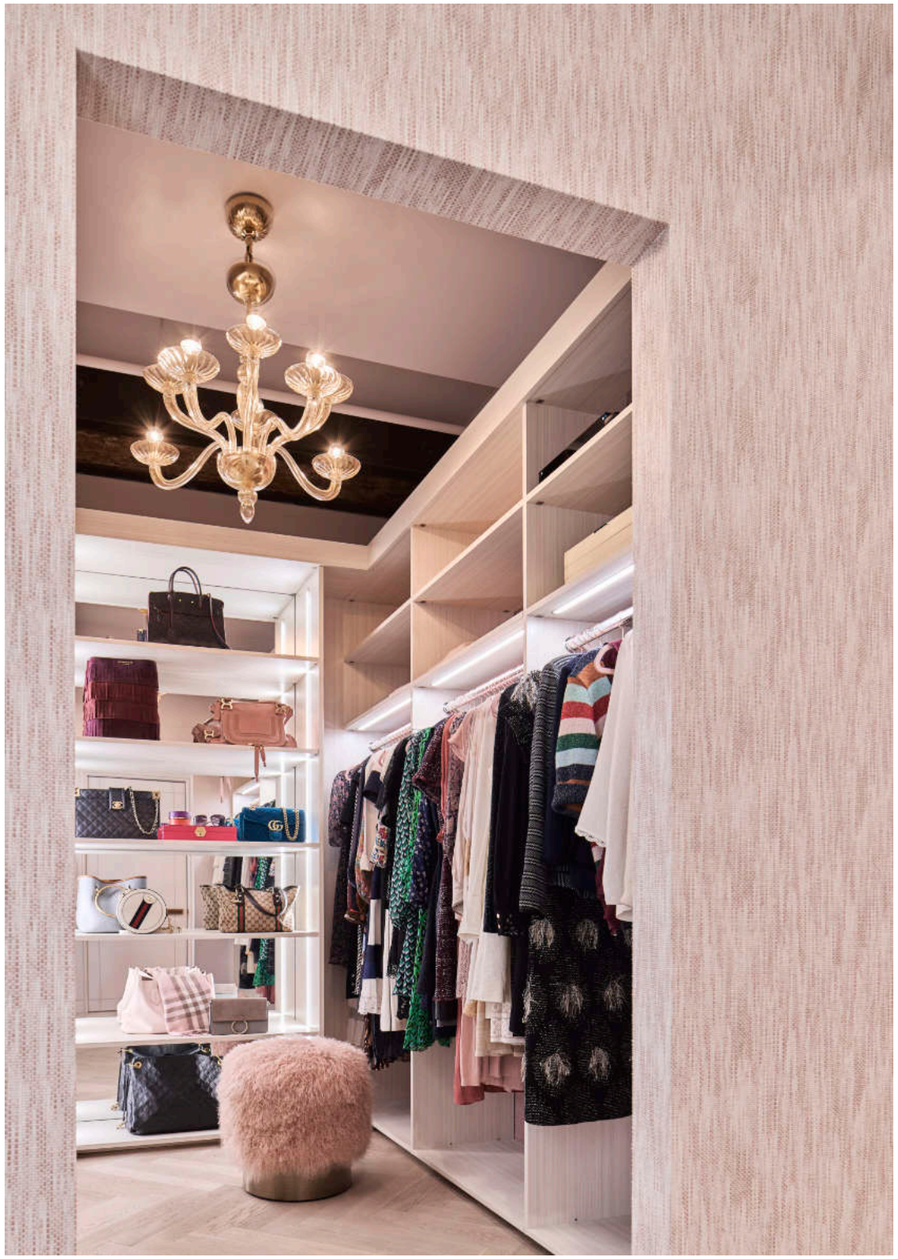

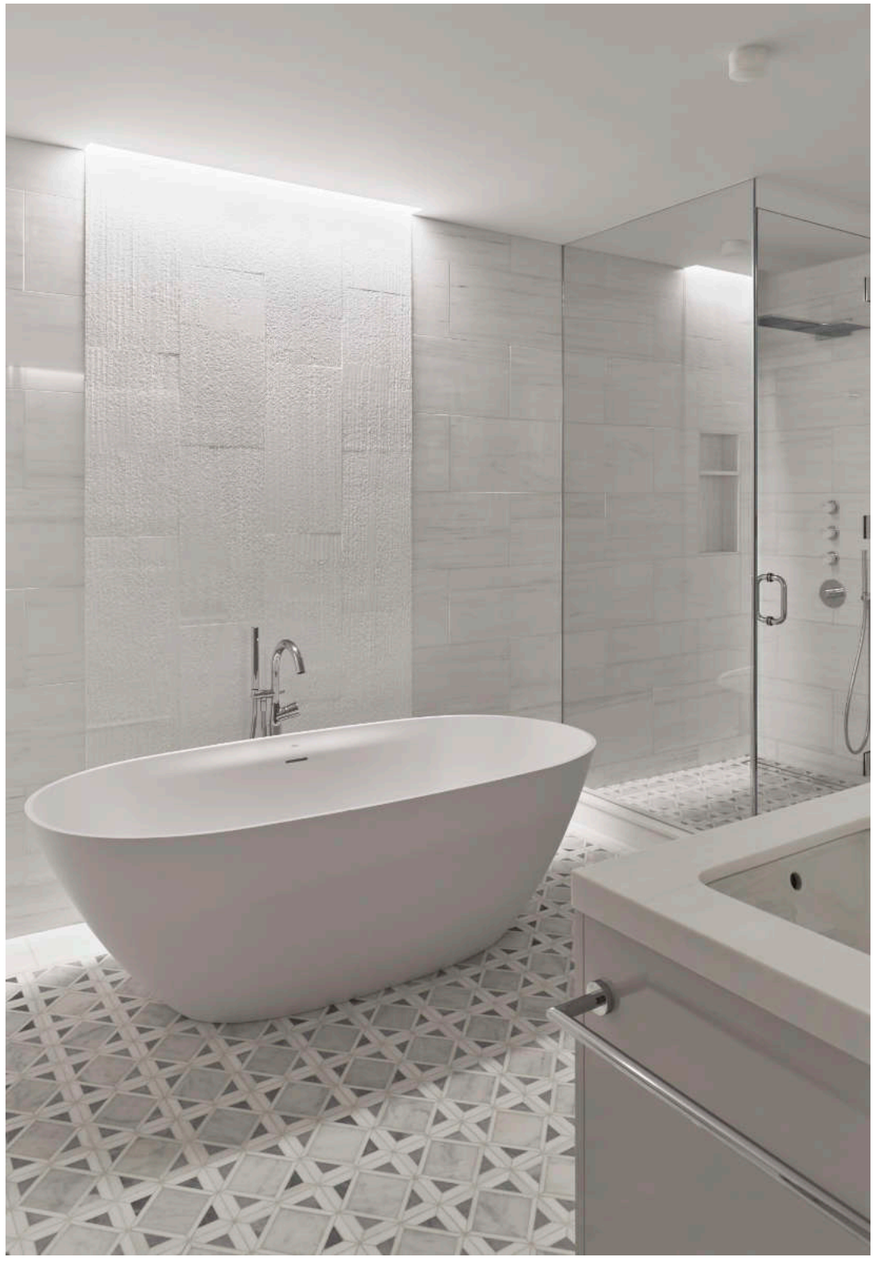

Whimsical, luxurious, but above all, comfortable are the finishes in the owner's suite as they soften up the industrial, old printing house environs while complementing the vibe at the same time.

Francis Toumbakaris is the founder and principal designer of Francis Interiors, where he drives the firm's unwavering commitment to creating exquisite interiors for his clients.

While living in his homeland of Athens, Greece, Francis was an acclaimed ballet dancer and performed around the world, including New York's Broadway. Those years of dance gave him a foundational awareness of how people move through space, with grace, balance, and harmony. With artistry embedded in his DNA, combined with his expertise in lighting design, Francis now uses the home as his stage to create impactful interiors that carry the essence of the humans living there.

Before calling Manhattan his home, Francis resided in Switzerland, Germany, and Japan. His extensive travels, along with his Greek heritage, influence his dynamic design vocabulary and his eye for beauty.

To Francis, "a beautifully designed home is both transformative and evocative; it has the ability to transport us to a place we love, while evoking a sense of familiarity and comfort deep within us."
